

The Promised Princess

Once upon a time, there was a princess from a distant kingdom.

She fell in love with a king whose name the world has forgotten.

The king had to march to protect his kingdom, but he promised himself to the princess and gave her a blade that, like their love, would never RUST.

Blade of the Promised Princess (d8+3)

An identical copy of the Blade of the Forgotten King.

The kingdom and the secret of forging the Immaculate Steel vanished before the Basilisks, beneath the strata of the world.

The bearer's duty is to protect what they hold most dear. A heavy burden.

The edge never rusts or breaks, but engraved upon it is a message that transcends any language:

"Make a vow for your great cause, or purposeless the edge will crumble to dust."

When wielding the Blade of the Promised Princess, roll the damage twice and keep the higher result.

The Blade of the Promised Princess can cut through the fire barrier and open the way to the lost temple. The Latrofax burn if they attempt to wield it.

If this sword is wielded against the Cantigaster, memories of the Promised Princess torment him. Attacks and Defenses against him have a -3 to the DR.

Only the familiar of his sorcerer returned.

The Promised Princess
followed it after the king.

The world also forgot her name.